ENCLOSURE

U.S. NATIONAL POLICY ON DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION TO THE WORLD.

PREAMBLE

The American people for themselves and for peoples and governments associated with them in a world comity, seek to realize the principles of individual human dignity and equality, liberty of thought and expression, justice under the rule of law, and the community's responsibility for and to its members, which are bases of the democratic way of life. The American attempt to attain these ideals is presented to other peoples as an illustration of experience in seeking goals and meeting problems common to all peoples -- not as an illustration of national achievement or as a justification of an ideological system.

Therefore: the Government of the United States, determined to protect the integrity of its political and social structure and to maintain the liberties of mankind inviolate from enslavement and political subversion, and in order to insure international tranquility, and promote the general welfare of the World; fully recognizing in keeping with the United Nations Charter that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest; resolves to combine the use of U.S. government news and information resources to impart throughout the world an intelligent appreciation of the rights of man and the fruits of liberty.
